Beginning December 1st, Galerie Kornfeld presents the Berlin based artist Susanne Roewer (* 1971). Her sculptures and paintings play with representational motifs and combine a variety of different materials. The artist borrows from the natural sciences to give material expression to her ideas and thoughts.

The dark time at the end of the year, decorated with special lights, is a time for review. What was the flood of images and experiences that washed up over the year? What was swept away, and what was destroyed? Some things glow more than before in the darkness, but closer inspection also reveals cracks, dents, holes.

Similar processes are the basis of Susanne Roewers paintings and sculptures. An illuminated main theme is washed over with shiny new updates. Accompanying ornaments become firmly attached, encrusted and are dragged away again in the currents. This torrent of images does not necessarily lead to a relentless succession of beautiful illustrations. Only the toughest surfaces of the initial object can withstand the constant erosion unscathed. That which remains is modified, worn away and scarred over time.
